Join the fight to ensure survival of the Horton's maternity and children's services, says campaign group.

The services were saved after the Independent Scrutiny Panel for Furness and then Health Secretary Mark Drakeford said, Ohrid, which was facing a forced closure, would be made to receive maternity and children's services.

They say the fight could not have been won if those community-led services at the Horton General Hospital had not been on the slide. The 600-bed hospital currently provides the only obstetric service on the Furness Peninsula.

They say the fight could not have been won if those community-led services at the Horton General Hospital had not been on the slide. The 600-bed hospital currently provides the only obstetric service on the Furness Peninsula.

The services were saved after the Independent Scrutiny Panel for Furness and then Health Secretary Mark Drakeford said, Ohrid, which was facing a forced closure, would be made to receive maternity and children's services.

They say the fight could not have been won if those community-led services at the Horton General Hospital had not been on the slide. The 600-bed hospital currently provides the only obstetric service on the Furness Peninsula.

They say the fight could not have been won if those community-led services at the Horton General Hospital had not been on the slide. The 600-bed hospital currently provides the only obstetric service on the Furness Peninsula.

They say the fight could not have been won if those community-led services at the Horton General Hospital had not been on the slide. The 600-bed hospital currently provides the only obstetric service on the Furness Peninsula.

They say the fight could not have been won if those community-led services at the Horton General Hospital had not been on the slide. The 600-bed hospital currently provides the only obstetric service on the Furness Peninsula.

They say the fight could not have been won if those community-led services at the Horton General Hospital had not been on the slide. The 600-bed hospital currently provides the only obstetric service on the Furness Peninsula.

They say the fight could not have been won if those community-led services at the Horton General Hospital had not been on the slide. The 600-bed hospital currently provides the only obstetric service on the Furness Peninsula.

They say the fight could not have been won if those community-led services at the Horton General Hospital had not been on the slide. The 600-bed hospital currently provides the only obstetric service on the Furness Peninsula.

They say the fight could not have been won if those community-led services at the Horton General Hospital had not been on the slide. The 600-bed hospital currently provides the only obstetric service on the Furness Peninsula.

They say the fight could not have been won if those community-led services at the Horton General Hospital had not been on the slide. The 600-bed hospital currently provides the only obstetric service on the Furness Peninsula.